The Link 7.05 + 6.45 works in conjunction with Detroit Diesel DPM modules and two-speed diesel engines. The Link 7.05 + 6.45 can communicate with any DPM module, including Module 6.0, Module 6.5, and Module 7.0 for engine calibration. The 6.45 module communicates with the transmission, and the 7.05 module communicates with the engine management computer. This combination of tools and sensors allows a diagnosis of the car, including all the subsystems. A two-speed diesel engine can also be used to measure and display an engine's rpm. If the two-speed diesel engine's sixth gear is not engaged, then the engine's rpm can be displayed using the seven-digit display of the 7.05 module. This can be used to monitor the engine's rpm. The software in the 7.05 + 6.45 combination allows the user to enter "what if" scenarios, and the unit will generate a list of troubleshooting steps to help the user. The user can then use one of the diagnostics on the unit to perform the troubleshooting. If the units do not respond to the commands, it can be sent out to service. The software of the 7.05 + 6.45 combination can perform operations such as evaluating temperatures, adding diagnostic rules, or deleting diagnostic rules. It also allows the user to evaluate the operations of the engine, battery, transmission, and cooling system, including the temperature of the coolant, oil pressure, turbocharger pressure, intake manifold pressure, fuel injector opening, engine speed, and battery current.
